

Memories are what connect us to the past. People will die and joyful moments will end, but we will always have our memories. Thus, memories allow us to further grow our relationships, reflect on the lives of loved ones that have passed away, and ensure that history is not repeated.

These pictures represent my memories of my dad. Events like our 200 mile bike ride from Seattle to Canada, our 11 day, 100 mile hike in the high-desert of New Mexico, our mission trip to Mexico, our family cruise to Alaska, our white-water rafting excursion, a family outing to Seattle, and his daily notes to my sister and I are all represented in this collage. While my dad might be dead, the memories I have of him certainly are not. These pictures represent these memories.
